This reference guide and course design was developed by Michael Haupt. Updated content and examples were obtained from IBM manuals, industry standard textbooks, and information available in the public domain.

The following SYS-ED employees and systems consultants contributed to the updating of this courseware: Sharif Ahmed, Linda Bliden, Ben Blum, Mike Chudasama, Jonathan Clarke, Paul Olson, Judy Roth, David Silverberg, Karen Schwartz, and Jerry Wolff. The content has been reviewed by David Shapiro and David Silverberg. It is the copyright of Computer Education Techniques, Inc. All rights reserved.

For purposes of consistency, the term "dataset" is used for defining terms and explaining concepts. The single word dataset used by IBM Corporation in screens and menus is used as is. Our research and experience indicates that reference is made to both dataset and data set in the software and its reference manuals.

This z/OS JCL - Basic course is supported through the Computer Education Techniques courseware as a learning center:
